Background

Verjus is mentioned in the medieval manuscript Le Menagier de Paris (c. 1392) and is a traditional seasoning in European wine-producing countries. All over France women produced both their own verjus and their own vinegar.

Making of Verjus

The grapes are handpicked at veraison (onset of colouring in grapes) to reduce the cropload in our vineyards. This is a perfect time to make verjus because it is at the start of flavour development in the grape when the acids are still high and the sugars are around 10%. Whole-bunch pressing is the next process; the juice is then cold settled and sterile filtered into the bottle.

Serving Ideas

Verjus is a wonderful grapey condiment that can be used on salads, either straight from the bottle or in a low-kilojoule vinaigrette using walnut, olive or a neutral oil combination with honey or sugar, and sherry or balsamic vinegar. For deglazing, splash into the pan after sautéing light meats such as chicken or veal to make a light sauce. For more ideas please refer to our website.

Tasting Note

Pale straw with a green hue. Lifted fragrant, zesty aromas of citrus blossom and stone-fruits. The palate has fresh, juicy grape flavours with hints of tangy apple and stone-fruits, bright acidity and a crisp finish.
